- Tasmania is the smallest and most picturesque state of Australia. Separated from the mainland by Bass Strait it is a unique land of rugged mountains, fertile farmland and scenic coastline. Tasmania's climate is temperate, with summer daytime temperatures often around 25 degrees Celsius while winter daytime temperatures seldom fall below 10 degrees Celsius. Rainfall is predominantly in winter.
- Primary industries include agriculture, mining, fishing and forestry. Due to favourable climatic conditions, agriculture is varied and includes vegetable production, poppies for pharmaceutical products, pyrethrum for natural insecticides, dairying, beef, lamb and wool production. A clean, green image is being used to promote these products on the world market. Secondary industry plays an important part in the state's economy. It includes mineral smelting, paper manufacturing, vegetable processing, cheese and chocolate production. Energy is currently derived from hydropower; the first wind power farm has been established and natural gas will be brought onshore in the near future.

- Tourism is a significant industry in the state. Many tastes are catered for with heritage and wine trails and some of the world's best bush walking and fly fishing. The island has a decentralised population of approximately 500,000. The capital city is Hobart in the south of the state. Other important centres are Launceston, Devonport and Burnie.
- Today, Aboriginal descendants are endeavouring to retain as much as possible of their culture. Britain granted responsible government to the island in 1855 and in 1901 Tasmania became part of the Commonwealth of Australia.

- Baton Rouge, the state capitol, is our largest city, and is in Mississippi River plantation country. It is the home of Louisiana State University, a major research institution. With art and history museums, distinctive architecture, a world class planetarium, and great restaurants, District 6200 is a wonderful place to visit.
